A BANGUINQY collision has taken place between a party of Zouaves going out to Mexico and the troops charged with maintaining order in the island of Martinique. The following details are given in the Moniteur de la Martinique :—

the roadstead of Fort-de-France on the morning of October 27th, having on board 1930 men of the 1st and 3rd regiments of Zouaves. On the same day they arrived from Mexico with 6000 soldiers, who were sent to the town of Zouave where they were landed, as the vessel had to undergo some slight repairs, and they were assigned Fort Desaix as their quarters. The Governor had decided to allow the town to be visited by 200 at a time, and as the Allier was to remain about a week in port, each soldier would get his share of provisions during his stay. The day after their arrival, however, the Zouaves did not pay attention to arrangement, crowded together round the principal entrance gate of the fort, demanding with loud cries and threats to go out in ten minutes. Captain Leconte, commander of the fort, then intervened, explaining in a calm manner of the fort, then threatened them, but they refused to appease them, but not succeeding, gave orders to Sub-Lieutenant Jourmet to collect all the disposable troops and place them in a line before the gate of entrance. During his absence, however, the outbreak assumed more serious proportions, the Zouaves taking advantage of the confusion to rush upon the French troops in the rear, while some of the latter were engaged with the guard, whilst some had recourse to the fire-arms of the men in hospital, their own arms having remained on board the vessel. In this way Lieutenant de la Jonquet was struck by a shot, which broke his arm; a marine was killed by a ball from a carbine; and another was wounded and died of his wounds. The bayonet thrusts. Captain Leconte, who had returned to the scene of action, finding himself forced, after repeated efforts to repulse the assailants, to retire as far as the gate, took up a position on the slope of the outside, determined to defend the issue at all hazards. He was killed by a shot from the French troops. He attempted sorties, and twice was repulsed by the enemy, with loss sufficient to enable the captain to maintain his position till the arrival of the succour he orders from the Governor, had collected together at Fort St. Louis, a first detachment of seventy-five men, which was sent by the Despatch to the nearest point of the river, where the Despatch was sent on in advance, with twenty men to aid Captain Leconte, but without orders not to fire till the last extremity. The Zouaves had, in the meantime, found an additional number of firearms and a quantity of ammunition in the fort, and placed in ambushes behind the ramparts kept up a sharp fire on Captain Leconte's company, which was still guarding the entrance. Captain Leconte who arrived at the fort at daybreak, and wearied with finding his men dropping by a fire which they were not allowed to return, at length gave the word to take aim at all the Zouaves who were

There were seen by musketeers, and this being done the troops were divided soon became general. The forces opposed to the revolt were now augmented by a detachment of most of the crew of the steam-cannibette Roland, and by the crew of the battery of artillery which was the two boatswain, penetrated into the midst of the Zouave, and made endeavours to appease the rebellion. A short pause ensued, after which the mutineers made another desperate rush at the officers, but were again repulsed by the troops. The officer felt that it was absolutely necessary to prevent as any cost whatever the violent intrusion into the town of a set of men who were so completely without scruple, and the excellence of the troops was so completely demonstrated, that it was to be expected that the mutineers would be completely crushed.

denly shown. The Zoaves were thus kept in awe, and the captain was thus enabled to retire and make his report to the Governor, leaving Captain Leconte in his place. On his return he found the mutineers somewhat less violent, and he gave them to understand that the Governor's wish was that they should stay at once and unconditionally, unless they wished still to continue their rebellion. He was addressing that the chief of the colony would come in person next day to ascertain the facts and dictate his determination. From that moment order was re-established. On the 29th, the governor, in accordance with what had been announced, proceeded to the fort and addressed the Zoaves in emphatic language, that their fate was thence-loss of life in this deplorable affair. The men considered. On the side of the garrison there were three killed and ten wounded, and on that of the Zouaves, sixteen killed and thirty-seven wounded. The Governor permitted, at their request, about thirty of the Zouaves to accompany their deceased comrades to the cemetery. The burial of the soldiers of the garrison took place at 3, that of the Zouaves at 4 in the afternoon. The ceremony being performed, as usual, at the chapel of the military hospital. That night passed off in the greatest tranquillity.

On the following day, the 30th, at 8 in the morning, the embarkation commenced by detachments of 200 men each; at half past 1 all were on board, and the Allier weighed anchor at 4 o'clock for Mexico.

MATCH BETWEEN ROBERTS AND BUNTING.—The return of John Roberts from Australia has given a new impetus to the grand play on the "board of green cloth," and a match on Monday night, October 30th, at the Crown Hotel, Regent-street, Haymarket, brought together a crowded company to welcome back the champion of the elegant and scientific game. Roberts undertook to give 400 points in 1000 to S. Bunting, a player of very considerable repute at Manchester, whence Roberts himself originally hailed. The champion looked in the best possible health, and was welcomed with applause and cordial greeting as he ascended the room with his usual commendable punctuality. The new comer was also cheered, the company including many aristocratic sportsmen and gentlemen, there being also present nearly all the celebrities of billiard-playing in the metropolis to see how the new addition to the "professionals" would perform." From the commencement of the game it was evident that Roberts's trip had not in the slightest degree unsteadied his hand and eye, or varied that remarkable confidence which his profound knowledge of the game inspires. He did not make any marvellous break for him, 114 being the largest 22 spot strokes), but the next, 68, 49 (3 of them), 42, 34, 32, &c. He scored 251 to his opponent's 861, and when the house adjourned to recess, the aggregate stood—Roberts, 601. Points.

Mr. Bracebridge, a Warwickshire magistrate, suggests that a general declaration be signed against the use of lamb, each head of a family signing, pledging himself not to use it in 1866. A vast and useless slaughter of lambs would be prevented; they are killed from Christmas to midsummer at a great loss to the country, not only in food but in wool. Lamb is, in small degree, consumed by the rich, in a much larger one by the middle classes, and some of the highly paid artisans and working classes, as a matter of course. The refraining from its use is no calamity, but would lead to better ways of expending weekly income.

In the French play of Famille Benoitte in the following passage:—"Ah! simple attire in my early youth, what is now become of you? Ten yards of muslin, three yards of ribbon, and a flower in the hair! and with that, fifteen years of age, a brilliant complexion, the pleasure—delight of a first ball! What warm-out-door pleasures—what pleasures—what a thrill of emotion! The sight of a dress so simple and so modest! Ah! muslin, white muslin! the ungrateful muslin that you were indebted to you for their husbands now deny you to their daughters! O sacred muslin, Virgin of the toilet, save our young girls who are drowning themselves in floods of lace!"
